The particular sentence that I highlighted, "Wow, there's so much to unpack here..." has little actual content. I'd say it takes a particular effort to read that into my response.

To the contrary, my response sets a positive example on how to respond to a rant by a narcissistic abuser. It acknowledges having read the rant, makes clear that I will not respond, and it does so without provoking. It's part of "establishing boundaries".

(I believe I have shared with you (and others on the committee) this

Meanwhile in the same thread:

- Accusation by Dima: "You are just not willing to view the existing Sage tooling under a critical loop"

- Accusation by Dima: "this is simply FUD spread by certain parties here " <https://groups.google.com/g/sage-devel/c/5kmxaw105lg/m/JEWw7L2VAAAJ>

- Insinuations/accusations by Dima: "you are actively preventing people to do work there, e.g. on #36753."

Dima is making public denunciations on a daily basis.

- <https://github.com/sagemath/sage/pull/37287#issuecomment-1955119464>
- <https://github.com/sagemath/sage/pull/35403#issuecomment-1959263619>

And the earlier ones from January are still there for the world to see:

- "coming from Matthias, often coupled with responses by him (on trac/github) I consider rude and disrespectful of other's opinions." /

"You can see how I am subjected to gaslighting by Matthias there." /

"edited in a questionable way by Matthias"

Thanks for letting us know. As I mentioned earlier, we'll be meeting to talk about all of this next week.
